GUIDING NOTES FOR WRITING SOAP NOTE

The Four Parts of a SOAP Note

1. Subjective

The subjective component of a SOAP note focuses on the patient's personal experiences, feelings, and concerns. This section should include details about the patient's chief complaint, history of present illness, medical and family history, and any relevant social or environmental factors. When writing the subjective portion, it's essential to use the patient's words as much as possible to accurately convey their perspective.

2. Objective

The objective section of a SOAP note records observable data and factual information about the patient. This can include vital signs, physical examination findings, laboratory results, and any additional diagnostic data. In the context of mental health treatment, the objective section may also include details about the patient's appearance, behavior, and speech patterns.

3. Assessment

The assessment portion of a SOAP note is where the healthcare provider evaluates the information gathered during the subjective and objective sections. This section may include a diagnosis, a summary of the patient's progress, and any potential risk factors or complications. In the case of anxiety and depression, the assessment might focus on the severity of symptoms, the effectiveness of current interventions, and any co-occurring conditions.

4. Plan

The plan section outlines the next steps in the patient's treatment, including any changes to their current interventions or the addition of new therapies. For anxiety and depression, this might involve adjustments to medications, the introduction of new coping strategies, or referrals to additional support services.
